City Council votes to protect downtown revitalization efforts

The Lemon Grove City Council took action Monday night to protect merchant's and the City's efforts to revitalize downtown.

The Council held a public hearing to consider amending the zoning ordinance to require that any work affecting the exterior appearance of property in the downtown revitalization area to have the approval of the Community Development Agency to ensure that it is consistent with revitalization goals. The amendment would also require that signs in the area would be consistent with revitalization.

It will provide a design review of any changes that take place in the area, so that the City can ensure that the Redevelopment Agency's investment in that area will not be compromised by improvements made by an individual property owner that are inconsistent with the revitalization goals.

This measure will protect previous revitalization efforts, said City Manager Jack Shelver, "We don't want someone new coming into change what's already been done."

A change in building inspection services was on the agenda, however. The City passed a resolution approving a contract with Esgil Corporation to provide building inspection services for the City, due to the death of the previous building inspector, Al

Lynn.

Esgil will now perform all building inspection, assist with the issuance of permits and provide a minimum of three hours per day to assist the public. Edward Wilczack, Esgil's building department service manager, has been designated as the City Building Official.

A resolution concerning the pipeline to be installed by the San Diego County Water Authority in Lemon Grove was also passed.

The resolution outlined the conditions under which the Water Authority would receive an encroachment permit to install the pipeline in Massachusetts Avenue, San Miguel Avenue, Palm and Skyline.

The pipeline construction should take approximately 18 months and will require some of the four-lane streets to be restricted to only one lane of traffic during various parts of construction.

Of final note, City staff made a recommendation that the Council consider drafting an ordinance requiring low-flow devices on all new construction and on all remodels that involve the plumbing system.

This ordinance would merely accelerate the application of state legislation that will require all building codes to have a provision requiring the installation of low-flow toilets and urinals in new buildings after January 1, 1992.

Marian Williams, Stella John, Frances Rowley, Peg Rosenberger and Charlotte Gates wore the winning bonnets in the Easter parade.

Seniors celebrate Easter with spring fling

By Lisa Parsons

Easter bonnets were all the rage Thursday, March 28th at the Lemon Grove Senior Center.

Beautiful bonnets bursting with blossoms, bunnies, chickens and eggs adorned the heads of ladies and gentlemen, alike.

Seniors from the Adult Day Care Health program began the Easter bonnet parade in a wide selection of hand crafted bonnets and hats made out of lace and paper.

A brief intermission followed and seniors who come to Center daily to enjoy Valley-Grove Nutrition project meals lead the crowd in a rousing rendition of "Easter Parade" and other spring-time favorites--inspiring some spry souls to dance.

Then the seniors from the nutrition project lined up for their own Easter parade and Easter bonnet contest judging.

The judges had a tough time deciding between a cowboy hat festooned with flowers, a hat sporting an Easter basket with bunnies, a bonnet designed to look like a nest with a chicken perched on top and many other creative chapeaus.

Finally, five winners were declared: Marian Williams won in the floral category; Stella John won "most beautiful;" Frances Rowley won "most outrageous;" Peg Rosenberger won with her lacy pink creation; and Charlotte Gates won "most creative."

As the festivities continued on, much of the talk centered on plans for capturing a prize at next year's Easter bonnet contest and parade.

Enhanced Sierra snowpack puts stringent water restrictions on hold in the Helix Water District

April 1 has come and gone, and the Helix Water District (HWD), like the other members of the parent Metropolitan Water District, is awaiting the developments of the weeks to come.

Until then, according to HWD General Manager Bob Friedgen, all conservation efforts are "on hold" at their present levels.

According to Friedgen, staff of the California Department of Water Resources have been making snow surveys in the Sierras all week, determining the depth and moisture content of the mountain snow pack. These surveys will estimate the spring runoff and ultimately, determine how much additional water the Department of Water Resources will send to Southern California. Friedgen points out that the area has already received its originally-allotted 10 percent for 1991 and the Edmiston Pumping Station was turned off several weeks ago. The area does, however, continue to receive water from the Colorado River viaduct.

Friedgen states that a series of meetings during the week of April 8 by the various area water boards will determine the levels of conservation to be adopted for the remainder of 1991. A key factor will be a determination by Los Angeles water authorities as to how much water they can expect from their regular Owens Valley sources. Should that resource provide more than currently anticipated, more water would be available for other members of the MWD including the Helix Water District.

Friedgen also notes that the CWA is now receiving twice its Colorado River entitlement due to Arizona's having yet to complete a new water project which will eventually take its regular share of the resource.

Friedgen expects that, when the smoke has cleared, the HWD will drop to a 30 percent conservation rate, retroactive to April 1. He has, however, a warning for District consumers: "When the water faucet for Southern California turns off in April, it gets dry fast and leads to a long, dry summer."

Recreation Department Director Nancy McCadam proudly stands by the Community Center's new sign.

City logo gives new identity

Graphic Solutions has completed design work, and is presently implementing a new identity program for the City of Lemon Grove.

"Our design uses a background pictorial treatment incorporating local landmarks, dramatic swash script typestyle and vivid colors to create a bright, new image for this young city," stated Simon Andrews, Graphic Solutions' principal.

The graphic has been developed in two versions: a circular official seal for documents, stationary and printed forms, and an oval logo for printed forms, and promotional applications and signage. City entry and facility identification signs use porcelain enamel to capture the logo's distinctive colors.

Grossmont College offers summer programs in Europe

Summer travel to Paris, Madrid and Rome will be linked to higher education through the 1991 Grossmont Abroad programs.

Offered by the Grossmont Community College Foreign Language Department, three travel-study programs offer college credits in French, Spanish or the humanities.

Grossmont in Paris features two weeks preparation at Grossmont College and three weeks of classes in Paris with excursions to some of the most famous sights in and around Paris.

Up to eight hours of French language credits can be earned through this program, which runs from June 26 through July 21. French instructor Muriel Vitaglione is coordinating this program.

Arranged in cooperation with the University of Madrid, the Spanish language component offers the rare opportunity of studying and practicing Spanish in the country of its origin. After initial study at Grossmont College, students have room and board at a University of Madrid dorm from June 10 through July 26.

Side trips to cities like Sevilla, Toledo, Cordoba and Granada as well as Madrid's cultural centers are included in the course. Spanish Professor Paul Jacques heads the Grossmont in Madrid program.

A summer humanities five-week program led by Alberto Benzi begins with classes on the Grossmont Campus.

After two weeks, the entire class is transported to Rome where they will be lodged at La Casa dello Studente. Grossmont in Rome runs June 10 through July 11.

Registration deadline for the Grossmont Abroad programs is April 30.

The credits are transferrable to California State Universities and Universities of California.

Personal comments of Councilman Bob Burns

Public meetings are interesting episodes that run the gamut of the extremely poignant to the very funny. Sometimes there is an element of exasperation, as well.

For the most part, the people who attend meetings are there because there is an ox that has been, is being, or is about to be gored. We are constantly amazed that more of our citizens do not seem to be interested in anything else that goes on in city government, despite very large amounts of money being spent. Also, despite the effects of some of our actions, and extensive noticing of the proposed decisions, many do not seem to heed same, until it is a done deal, so to speak. Then, the hue and cry comes on loud and clear. This may well be that the city staff does not do enough to get the message out, but the responsibility does often fall on the public shoulders to at least try to keep apprised of what is going on.

Then, we come to what is often called the "Gadfly." This usually is a person who, for reasons of his or her own, is compelled to present something from the podium every meeting. The agenda always provides a specific time slot during each meeting for public comment. Three minutes are allotted to each individual to present views on any subject that they desire to be heard. The law requires that the council take no action, unless an emergency is declared at the time the subject is presented.

The Brown Act does not permit action on routine things without full public notice of items placed on the agenda, so the council is simply following the rules, not dodging the request.

On another board that I am presently sitting on, we have a gentleman who rarely misses a meeting, and goes back with that record for about ten years. He is courteous, never goes past his three minutes, never uses abusive language, or even glowers when he calls for a member's resignation or implies misdeeds in our actions. He is heard even if most of his request go unfulfilled. In fact, he is actually missed when absent.

Of course, there are other individuals who are not possessive of the qualities listed above, and who seem to possibly have other motives or desires in stepping up to the podium. Where one will believe implicitly in the cause that is espoused, and genuinely radiate that sincerity, it is obvious that another may not. The staff and council appreciate the sincere and constructive public input and wish that there were more of it. The other verbal flagellation is always carefully noted and considered. If snide remarks or dark insinuations happen to be included, we just consider them as part of the job that we are paid such lofty salaries for. I have to congratulate our staff and my fellow council members for their patience and restraint. The old adage of "consider the source," helps us keep everything in perspective and to recognize our limitations in trying to be all things to all people. Our council meetings are not lengthy, and personally, I consider the public comment portion to be most important. We would welcome more input from our citizens to assist us in making the right decisions.

Councilman Bob Burns will address matters of concern to Lemon Grove and its citizens. If you have questions or suggestions for Dr. Burns, send them to P.O. Box BB, Lemon Grove, 91946.

Joan Embery of the San Deigo Zoo to give reading at Lemon Grove Library

As part of a national campaign to feature celebrities reading aloud in libraries, the Lemon Grove branch of the San Diego County Library will host Joan Embery, San Diego Zoo's goodwill ambassador, on Monday April 8.

As part of the library's "Night of a Thousand Stars" event, Embery will read from several books about the San Diego Zoo and talk about her experiences with zoo animals. She will also bring an animal to the presentation.

The program is free and will run from 7 to 8 p.m. at the library located at 8073 Broadway.

Known nationally for her television appearances on behalf of the San Diego Zoo and animal conservation, Embery has trained and handled some of the world's rarest and most unusual animals, from aardvarks to zebras and elephants to hummingbirds.

A frequent guest on "The Tonight Show," "Good Morning America," and other television programs, Embery has come to represent wildlife preservation through her loving and gentle handling of exotic animals. A native San Diegan, she and her husband live in Lakeside and raise horses on their 50-acre ranch.

Last year's "Night of a Thousand Stars" was such a success that the American Library Association decided to make it an annual event, headed again this year by First Lady Barbara Bush.

Last year, more than 2,000 celebrities promoted the importance of reading in libraries around the country.

Commentary

by Paul Treske

The baseball season is upon us, and I am a baseball fan. I have always been a fan. First, as a wide-eyed kid in the minor league bleachers of Hartford, Connecticut, and later, as an ardent and vociferous fan in every big-league city where I made my home. I've seen "Field of Dreams" six times, and could see it 60 more without tiring of it. I read the sports pages even before the comics, and I make everyone be quiet when the sports scores come on the TV.

That said, I have to admit that baseball today has driven me finally into the "Who cares anymore?" corner.

For too many of today's diamond "heroes," sulking seems to have replaced competition between the lines. Superstars, who last season signed for $3 million per year as tops in their fields, now find themselves as only number 40 on the list with the new salary pinnacle being $5 million and rising. And thus, they sulk and demand that their contracts be "renegotiated."

For the rest of us, a deal is a deal, and a contract is a contract, but not in the weird, weird world of professional sports. "To hell with the team and the fans ... if you don't give me $20 million for four years, I just won't play as well as I can."

Of course, if he gets that contract, he'll probably be sulking again next year, because someone else got $30 million for five years!

The spiraling salary insanity of baseball, unleashed by free agency, has led to new categories of athletes. The hard-playing team player has been replaced by the sulking multi-millionaire who plays his games at the contract table and in the media, rather than on the field. The hometown hero is now a wandering gypsy, who, due to free agency, plays a few years here and a few years there, never really identified with any team ... just a salary level.

Of course, the owners are no better. In their inability to rationally moderate salary levels (or anything else, for that matter), they have created an unsavory monster of rising prices and unstable teams.

And what about us, the lifetime fans? Players come and go, to the degree that, each season, we start with a team where yesterday's favorites are replaced by this year's strangers. So many of our "heroes" are unhappy with non-renegotiation of their contracts that we're not really sure whether or not they're really trying or just moping their way through a season, waiting for free agency. Above all, the cost of attending a game is fast reaching the prohibitive level. Professional football long ago reached the elitist level where only the affluent can afford to attend. Baseball, however, has always been seen as the game where pop could take mom and the kids to the ballpark for a reasonable price. No more. Following last year's dismal and altogether disgraceful season, our locals have raised ticket prices, and the city has raised parking fees. When we complain, we're told that the new rates are still lower than many other cities.

Put all of this together, and at least this fan's desire to see his team struggle is waning fast. To pay a lot of loot to see our bunch of rich cry-babies play their bunch of rich cry babies just doesn't have the appeal it used to.

Maybe I'll just stay home and watch "Field of Dreams" again.

A winning season

by Christopher Bright, Helix High School

There's something about football that distinguishes it from other sports. Maybe it's the intense conflict of wills resembling that of a holy war fought during the religious Crusades. Then again, it could be its similarity to a tribal ritual continually being played over and over as armor clashes against armor. Yet, with all of its instinctive characteristics, football is also a ballet of charismatic athletes racing, gliding and hurdling, as they push their bodies and abilities to the limit. It is this unlikely combination of primordial dance and graceful ballet that makes football unique.

As college draws nearer, I find myself reflecting on past experiences which may relate to university life. As I reminisce about the things that I have learned throughout my school years, my senior year of football is the one which has the most significance to me. The memories I have and the realizations I came to will last forever in the images of one football season.

To say the least, I was not the traditional football player. Standing almost 5'9" with my cleats on, I was not a true giant. However, I was a decent athlete with better than average intelligence, and that allowed me to play at the high school level. The other guys on the team called me "bright" boy, and looked to me for leadership and understanding. They all knew I was the ASB treasurer, the Boys' State Representative for our school, and that I had a higher than 4.0 GPA. But somehow, I just wanted to fit in and be a contributing part of the team. It was during my senior year that I felt this importance and likeness to my fellow teammates.

There is a certain, almost uncommunicable sense of brotherhood that arises in a football team over the course of a season. The first evidence of this sort of camaraderie in my senior year team became apparent in the first few weeks of practice which the players called hell, and rightly so. These were the conditioning weeks. I will always remember pushing and urging each other to keep going when we thought that our bodies could take no more beating. In this harsh environment we were all equals. Neither the level of athletic ability nor the person's mental capacity mattered. No one person was more important to the team than another. I believe someone even likened the team to the term "family."

But being a closely knit team wasn't enough to constitute success. There had to be that fire in the hearts of each and everyone of us. That fire and desire is what differentiates the competitor from the average player. Our coach called it "playing with passion." And it eventually became apparent that the chemistry of the team was one of intensity and desire to play the game.

During the course of the season, we were becoming more confident in our abilities, and as a result our closeness as a team followed suit. One by one we saw our goals being accomplished as we beat team after team. The future looked promising. As the season went on, our expectations for the team became very high. Until finally, we lost in the playoffs to a team we were not supposed to lose to.

I will never forget that cold Friday night, as I looked up reluctantly at the scoreboard trying to fight back the tears. We circled up as a team after the game for the last time. In a mixed emotional state of bewilderment, frustration and depression, a fellow teammate came forth and said, "We lost tonight, but we lost as a team. No matter how bad this feels, we still have a lot of good memories leading up to this point. Remember, we'll always be family."

They say that true friends are there to stand by your side in good times and in bad. As I look forward to attending college, a feeling of uncertainty befalls me. Whereas in high school, I knew where I fitted Big Macs, Jumbo Jacks, and Whoppers are the ultimate cuisine for the modern-day hamburger eating teenager.

Up in the Midwest during the late-thirties, the greatest taste treat for us teenagers was the world famous White Castle burger. The little gems were only five cents and included onion, pickle and catsup. "No substitutes, please!" From time to time, a coupon would appear in the local newspaper: "six hamburgers for 25 cents."

The little devils could be addictive and were so delicious that I could easily put away at least five or six. For less than 50 cents, I could have a great Saturday night; 25 cents for my meal, 5 cents for a Coke, and 12 cents for the movies. Most all theaters in those days showed a double feature, comedy or cartoon, news reel, and a free dish. Some nights, they even offered bingo or spino at no extra charge.

I recently heard of a San Diego businessman who ordered several hundred of the little delicacies from the White Castle in Minneapolis for his office party. The White Castle Company was so impressed that they paid the air freight from Minneapolis to San Diego.

For those folks from the Midwest who can remember and would give anything for an original White Castle hamburger, a local membership discount store now carries them frozen, ready for the oven or microwave.

In those days, I owned a 1933 Oldsmobile straight-eight sports coupe with the spare tires in the front fenders and a neat rumble seat in the back. That car was the envy of all the boys in my high school because it was a "girl-getting machine." Even though gasoline was only 17 cents per gallon, driving that car was expensive because it only got about six miles to the gallon.

By cruising around the hamburger joint so much, flaunting my sleek, black Olds, I soon became known as the "King of the White Castle."

When leaders make mistakes

by Joseph Walker

Where is Ward Cleaver when you need him?

You remember Ward, don't you? As the Beaver's dad on "Leave It to Beaver," he always seemed to know the right thing to say whenever his sons ran into new obstacles on the "road of life." Calm, confident and wise, he had a knack for seeing through surface frustrations and getting right to the heart of things, usually teaching an important lesson with a few well-chosen words.

"Gee, Dad, I guess you're right," Wally would say.

"Thanks, Dad," the Beaver would add, "you're swell."

Unfortunately, things rarely turn out like that for us. We run into the same kinds of obstacles the Cleavers faced, and we do our best to survive the impact. But when the time comes to be glib and articulate, my mind turns mushy and my tang gets tangled.

Kill the swelling music. Cue the laugh track.

Like the other day. My 11-year-old son, Joe, and some fifth-grade friends challenged a sixth-grade teacher and a couple of his students to a game of basketball, and the younger boys did amazingly well. In fact, Joe's team was ahead by a couple of points as the end of recess neared.

That's when it happened. He and one of the sixth-graders went up for a rebound together, and when the older boy came down with the ball, Joe took an awkward swipe at it, connecting solidly enough to knock his slightly-off-balance opponent over.

Now, you need to know this about my son: he has inherited three athletic gifts from his father - he's tall, he's husky and he's a little on the clumsy side. So, it wasn't too surprising to learn that an attempt to steal the ball had resulted in someone accidentally getting hurt. Nor was it surprising that the sixth-grader, stung by the blow, jumped up quickly and went after Joe to retaliate. But what was surprising was the teacher's reaction - he rushed over to step in between the combatants, just as you might expect. Then, he shoved my son to the ground, shouting, "Now you know how it feels!"

There was bewilderment in my son's voice as he related the story over the phone. "He didn't hurt me, Dad," he assured me, "But it made me feel bad. I could understand that kid getting mad, but teachers aren't supposed to do stuff like that, are they?"

Right about here is where Ward would have taken a deep draw on his pipe and come up with the perfect words to diffuse the situation. But I was too busy deciding how I felt. I was angry that an adult had used physical force against my son. I was concerned that maybe Joe wasn't telling me the whole story about how hard he pushed the other boy. I was also anxious to support a teacher who saw the incident unfold, and who, I assume, was handling the situation the best that he knew how. And I was also anxious to support my son who seemed to have been more confused than hurt by the events.

So what priceless gem of advice did I finally come up with? As I recall, it went something like this: "Maybe you'd better not play with that teacher anymore."

Somehow, I can't help but think Ward Cleaver would have handled it differently.

He would have calmly explained that while it's true teachers shouldn't use physical force to teach their lessons, sometimes they, like the rest of us, suffer lapses in judgment. That doesn't justify inappropriate actions. It just means that they're human, and will sometimes make mistakes. Perhaps, Ward would have even added that, occasionally, teachers come along who just shouldn't be teaching because they don't understand the responsibility and they don't handle it well. The same can be said of police officers, politicians, doctors and, for that matter, journalists. In every profession, there are individuals who should find another line of work before they really hurt someone.

But like Mom used to say, one bad apple doesn't spoil the whole bushel. One bad teacher doesn't mean all teachers are bad. One bad police officer doesn't bring dishonor to the entire law enforcement community. If an Eagle Scout robs a bank, that doesn't mean there's something inherently wrong with Scouting. And a fallen religious leader doesn't mean the fall of religion. Ultimately, we have to learn to accept people - or reject them - for who they really are, not for what they do or the organizations and individuals with which they associate.

That's what Ward would have said. And I think the Beaver would have understood. So would Joe. At least, I hope he will - even if I don't smoke a pipe.

Joe Freed on the Movies

This Week's movie: Career Opportunities

When I saw previews for "Career Opportunities" on television, they really made me want to see the movie. Not that I thought for a minute that it would be hilarious, but it did appeal to me somehow. All right, I'll admit it. I only wanted to see "Career Opportunities" because the previews featured a large-chested girl in a skin-tight shirt, provocatively riding an electric rocking horse. There ... I said it. Yes, I am a sexist pig. But don't start writing any complaint letters just yet, I've already been taught a lesson. For other than the equestrian delights I spoke of, "Career Opportunities" was a disappointing farce disguised as a John Hughes comedy.

Frank Whaley stars as Jim Dodge, a would-be millionaire, secret agent and Casanova, who still lives with his parents. Smooth-talking yet lazy, Jim just can't hold down a job. Jennifer Connelly (the one with the chest) is Josie McClellan, a town beauty queen living under the rule of her overbearing father. Now, imagining Jim and Josie accidentally locked in a local Target store for the evening and that's the film. Oh, yes ... they also have to outwit a couple of bumbling crooks. It's sort of like "Home Alone" with sex appeal.

Writer-producer John Hughes is starting to get lazy. I didn't think "Home Alone" was all that great, and this is worse. Any idiot with a typewriter could have shelled this fluff out in half an hour. Hughes has come to believe that he doesn't need a plot to make a movie, only a whimsical premise and a cameo by John Candy - this time he plays a Target Manager who mistakes Jim for a corporate executive. Fortunately, Hughes' current exercise in mediocrity cannot benefit from cute Macaulay Culkin, so moviegoers might find it easy to curb his success. Hughes is capable of much more as a writer, and we who pay the admission fees should demand that he live up to his capabilities.

There is a slightly humorous treatment of small-town family life, and a few shots of Jim's dad eating chicken legs with peanut butter that would be funny if they had anything to do with the rest of the movie. So, I guess the whole thing is a waste of time. I know many might be tempted to see this picture because the preview is well-crafted. But believe me, you'll be very disappointed.

Lee Greenwood sings for USO

Country singer Lee Greenwood, whose "God Bless the USA" became the unofficial "anthem" of the Persian Gulf War, will perform on April 12 at a San Diego concert to benefit the local USO. Greenwood's "Helping Hand Tour" will begin at 7:30 p.m. at Jack Murphy Stadium, and will be a "patriotic extravaganza" to honor returning troops and their families. Also appearing will be noted country singer Jann Brown. Plans are underway for the Navy to provide a aircraft fly-by and for released Marine Corps POWs Clifford Acree and Guy Hunter, both from Camp Pendleton, to be given keys to the city. Concert-goers are encouraged to bring American flags and banners to show their support.

Sixty percent of the concert's gross sales will be donated to the San Diego USO to provide aid for military families. Since the outbreak of the Persian Gulf conflict, nearly 2,000 active-duty military and their families have been served by the San Diego USO each week.

in, as far as the university level, I do not. Most likely, I will not know anyone at the college I attend, and I will be forced to form new friendships. I only hope they can be as true and productive as the ones I experience on my high school football team.

I see college as an opportunity to further one's "passion" for life. A place for those who are willing to take a chance by stepping out of their normal environment, and entering into a new endeavor in hopes of bettering their futures. It is this risk-taking that distinguishes those who have the "passion" for life from those who do not.

Lemon Grove resident wounded at nightclub

Lt. Octavia Collins of the Lemon Grove Sheriff's station had recently commented to Capt. Lynne Ziegler that it was not a matter of "if" an incident would occur at a certain Spring Valley nightclub, but rather, "when."

The "when" turned out to be 1:37 a.m. last Saturday, shortly after the dance club at 9620 Campo Road closed.

As the sun came up over Casa de Oro, Lt. John Tenwolde of the Sheriff's homicide was investigating the death of an 18-year-old man and the wounding of two others which had occurred hours before in the west parking lot of Club Tronix.

The wounded men, a 17-year-old Lemon Grove resident and an 18-year-old San Diego resident had been lifeflighted to Sharp and are expected to recover, according to Tenwolde. The 18-year-old La Mesa resident, Theodoros Zewdalem, was pronounced dead at the scene.

"From what witnesses say, the club closed at 1:25 a.m. Most of the crowd then congregated out front. A couple of females got into a fight, and the large crowd became agitated. Then, gunshots from five different weapons were fired--witnesses say about 100 shots," stated Tenwolde.

"We had gotten a lot of them out of the way, pulling them back into the club," explained Club Tronix security guard Mark Cadrin, "I carried this one guy on my back who was shot."

"They got the guns out of their cars -- we don't allow them to bring their weapons in here," said Jeff Nelson, club manager, deejay, and cousin of the man killed.

"He was my cousin over here from Ethiopia, he was scared and froze like a rabbit," explained Nelson. The club had closed at 1:25 instead of its regular 1:45 closing time, due to some of the patrons behavior.

"Some gang members were flashing their signs (hand gestures) -- I stopped the music once and asked them not to do it -- I just felt it was better to go ahead and close a little early," said Nelson, explaining that there was a large crowd of about 500 people at the club that night.

The Sheriff's department would welcome a change at Club Tronix. "I've been dealing with this club for three years now, first as a patrol officer and as the night shift sergeant for over a year. The gangs are very active there. Many times there have been problems inside the club, and incidents where shots are fired in the air from cars driving by," said Lt. Collins.

Business owners and residents in the area have been complaining about the club for many years.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF MARGARET ANNA ESPINOZA

Case Number: 154250

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors, and persons who may be otherwise interested in the will or estate, or both, of: MARGARET ANNA ESPINOZA
A PETITION has been filed by DENNIS MARK SIENKO in the Superior Court of California, County of San Diego.

THE PETITION requests that DENNIS MARK SIENKO be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests the decedent's WILL and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by the court.

THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on April 29, 1991 at 1:45 p.m. in Dept. F-5, located at 1501-55 Sixth Ave., San Diego, CA 92191

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within four months from the date of first issuance of letters as provided in section 9100 of the California Probate Code. The time for filing claims will not expire before four months from the hearing date noticed above.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a formal Request for Special Notice of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in section 1250 of the California Probate Code. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.
